BOOK PROJECT: EXPORTING BORDERS

Exporting Borders explains how the U.S. Department of Homeland Security (DHS) intruded into Mexican territory, testing and refining a system of extraterritorial administration that systematically integrated Mexican federal institutions into active yet subordinate roles under U.S. federal command. By tracing DHS intrusions and situating them within the historical context of U.S. interventions in Latin America and the Caribbean, the book links U.S. border externalization to developments in the American racial and imperial state. Likewise, Exporting Borders situates developments in the Mexican federal bureaucracy—including militarization—within elite-negotiated processes of externalization and containment. Ultimately, Exporting Borders explains the hemispheric intent and global implications of the U.S.-Mexico transnational system that forcibly transports people from north to south.

>> The American Political Science Association's 2023 Minority-Serving Institution Book Workshop Program supported the book project's early-stage development.

TRANSNATIONAL ARCHIVE

PROJECT: MAPPING LATINX ORGANIZATIONAL CAPACITIES

We are a collective of academics, community members, and practitioners mapping the historical development and collective impact of Latino organizational capacity across all 50 U.S. states. Our goal is to produce a more comprehensive account of Latino political power and its relationship to American democracy, fostering deeper understanding and investment in the organizations under study.
